The University of Kansas Professionals for Disability (KUPD) hosts “Getting Started and Staying on Track: Insights and Experiences on Becoming a Professor” as one of two student-focused events celebrating 50 years of the Department of Special Education. This new professor symposium is designed for master’s and doctoral level students interested in entering academia as a part of their career goals. The panelists are all alumni of the University of Kansas, Department of Special Education, and are currently serving as tenure-track faculty at universities. Perspectives on topics such as finding the proper “fit”; balancing teaching, research, and service; preparing for tenure; and understanding the overall process of becoming a professor will be addressed. The symposium is open to all interested students, faculty, and staff across all discipline areas.
